

17 PHILLIP ISLAND AUSTRALIA

28th OCTOBER, 2012

TYRES HEAT UP DOWN UNDER

Round seventeen and the penultimate round of the 2012 MotoGP™ season takes place at Australia's Phillip Island circuit, where the picturesque setting of the track belies its status as one of the cruellest on Bridgestone MotoGP tyres.

At roughly 4.44 kilometres in length, the majority of the Phillip Island circuit is quite easy on tyres, but the final section through the left-handed turns 11 and 12 are taken at high lean angles under continuous throttle opening, resulting in wheelspin and the generation of extreme temperatures. In fact, Phillip Island's last corner creates the highest tyre temperature recorded during the entire MotoGP season.

This large variation in operating conditions over the course of a lap make asymmetric rear tyres a necessity at this windswept circuit. The left side of the rear slicks feature rubber that is much harder than the right shoulder, and the rear slicks also employ a special heat-resistant construction – like that used at Sachsenring and Indianapolis – to keep tyre temperatures in check.

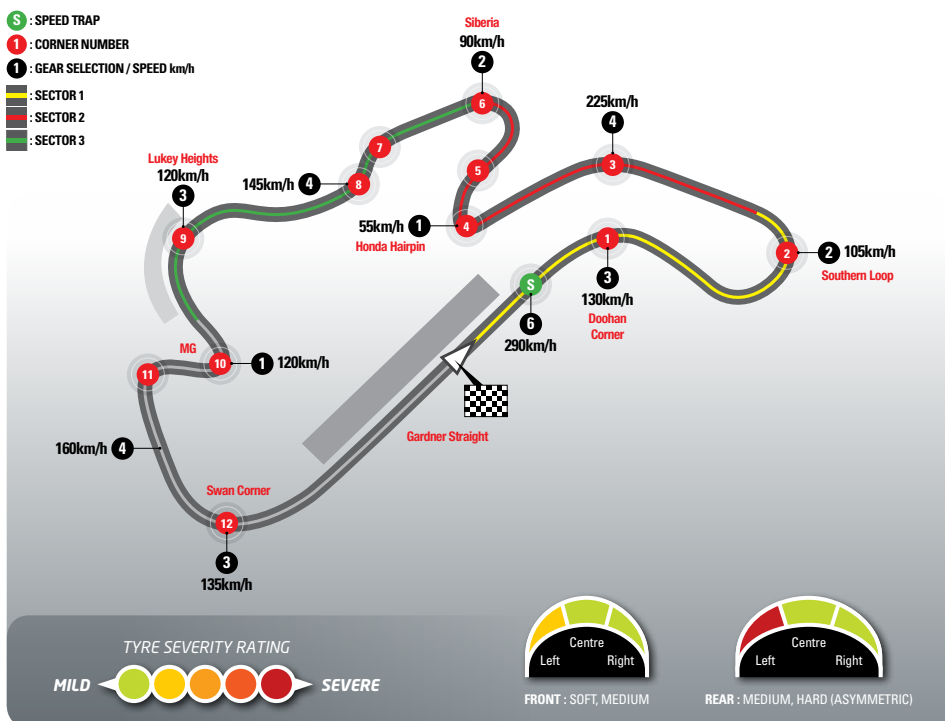

The front tyre compounds for Phillip Island are the soft and medium compounds which offer the best combination of cornering stability and warm-up performance at a circuit that is renowned for highly variable weather.

Phillip Island's last corner creates the highest tyre temperature recorded during the entire MotoGP season

ECOPIA EP001S LAUNCHED

Developed and manufactured in Japan, Ecopia EP001S, one of the world's first tyres with both A/A grading in Europe and the top AAA grade in the Japanese rating system is on sale across Europe from October 2012.

The advanced design of the Ecopia EP001S features Bridgestone's revolutionary NanoPro-Tech™ compound, with micro-silica and aqua powder, which translates into limited energy loss and low rolling resistance without compromising other areas of performance.

Outstanding wet grip is provided by the EP001S tread design with thick, straight grooves and horizontal sipes that reduce hydroplaning and improve contact with wet surfaces. Overall grip is enhanced by the round rib-edge design which equalizes the pressure across the tread blocks.

The special compound of the EP001S reduces energy losses and achieves 16% better rolling resistance than the Ecopia EP150, already in the market, while the enhanced balance between compound properties and tread pattern results in an 11% improvement over the EP150 in wet braking distance. The EP001S' consistent surface contact and convex centre block design will also provide for a quiet drive, herewith already being compliant with future 2016 EU regulation.

In addition to the top level fuel efficiency and wet grip of the new Ecopia EP001S, testing also shows that the tyre's wear rate and dry braking level are extremely competitive.

BRIDGESTONE FACT

Casey Stoner has won every Phillip Island Grand Prix since 2007 and should he win this year it would be the longest winning streak ever recorded at the Island

BRIDGESTONE MOTORSPORT ROUND-UP

SuperGT The final race of the 2012 season takes place this weekend at Twin Ring Motegi and though the championship has been decided, the fight for second and third place in the standings is still open. Lexus Team ZENT Cerumo's Yuji Tachikawa & Kohei Hirate currently sit second and are looking for a strong result on Sunday to consolidate their position. Meanwhile, Team IMPUL Nissan's Tsugio Matsuda and João Paulo de Oliveira currently sit fourth, yet just five points off third place heading into the final round.
